Re: High-speed broadband Tachie

I believe we have all the required paperwork and networking plans in place, and we have been coordinating the contractor Conuma for the Last Mile as well as the Point of Presence.

The Education Department and Eugene Joseph will be the first buildings connected to the network followed by the Band Office and Health Centre and Homes around April. If there are no delays, we will have the ISP ready and start registering customers in early or late April.

My name is Kimberly Johnnie, I belong to the Lusilyoo clan, I have 2 children, boy and a girl (million dollar family, don't need any more kids lol), I was working at the band office as Natural Resource Assistant, I needed a challenge, so I applied with Georgina Alexis for this job and to my surprise I got hired! along with Chasity Aslin as the Community Support Worker Assistant to Michelle Pierre. We are doing intakes with families for the Assessments through Asante, program funded by Jordan's Principal. This is all new to us, what I'm learning and experiencing through this project is beneficial to me, not only as a community support worker, but as a mother I look forward to the end result of this project and the benefits for our children.

New website helps residential school survivors preserve or destroy records

Records will be destroyed if no action is taken by Sept. 19, 2027

There's a new resource available to residential school survivors who made claims under the Independent Assessment Process or the earlier Alternative Dispute Resolution process. (Edmund Metatawabin collection/Algoma University)

Residential school survivors who made claims against the government have a new tool to help them decide what becomes of their records.

The Indian Residential School Adjudication Secretariat has started a new program to millions of records about residential schools are already stored.

- Some Catholic orders still withholding promised residential school records
- More supports needed for former residential school students in the North, say survivors

Claimants who are unsure whether or not they want to share their records can receive a copy to review before making their final decision.

Those who choose to share their records will be asked to sign a consent form.

Records for any survivors who have since died before signing the consent form will be destroyed.

Records are private and confidential: courts

According to a press release issued by the adjudicator, Canada's top courts ruled the Independent Assessment Process and the Alternative Dispute Resolution are private and confidential.

"Claimants, and no one else, control their [Independent Assessment Process] and [Alternative Dispute Resolution] records, and they alone have the right to decide what to do with them," Shapiro said.

alert survivors of their options regarding the records generated through the Independent Assessment Process or the earlier Alternative Dispute Resolution.

The secretariat has also launched a new website where people can learn more about their options.

"We have developed a robust notice program that includes training of health support workers across the country, paid advertising, social media, earned media, and other tools," Dan Shapiro, chief adjudicator of the independent assessment process, said.

The Independent Assessment Process was established through the Indian Residential Schools Settlement Agreement, which to date is the largest class action settlement in Canadian history, according to a press release issued by the adjudicator.

More than 38,000 claims were made through the Independent Assessment Process. According to the release, 99 per cent of them have been resolved and the final claims are expected to be resolved by 2020.

On Sept. 19, 2027, any record of claim generated through the Independent Assessment Process or the Alternative Dispute Resolution process will be destroyed unless the person the record concerns decides otherwise.

Destroy, share, preserve or keep a record personally

Survivors can choose to preserve their records, share their records, or ask for a copy for themselves.

Claimants who chose to preserve their records may choose to share them with the National Centre for Truth and Reconciliation at the University of Manitoba, where
